

ADD-ON REVENUE PERFORMANCE REPORT

Pacific Axes | Oct 1, 2025 – Apr 30, 2026

PROJECT BACKGROUND

Background

Pacific Axes is an axe-throwing venue offering hourly sessions and private or corporate events. In addition to the main experience, customers can add arcade and pinball tokens to their booking, which is a small upsell designed to extend their visit and add extra entertainment after their session.

Objective

Analyze 7 months of booking data to assess the revenue by experience and how well the token add-on performs both financially and in customer adoption, and determine whether the add-on is worth keeping, or whether the space would be better used for a different attraction.

Scope

This report covers 7 months of booking data including 880+ online bookings and on-site transactions. On-site transactions could not be categorized by booking type due to system restrictions. All revenue figures and booking volumes have been anonymized and adjusted to protect business confidentiality, but the structure, methodology, and findings accurately reflect the original analysis.

The analysis was completed in the following steps:

Process

1. Exported raw booking data from Bookeo (online reservations) and Square (on-site sales).
2. Cleaned the data by standardizing experience types, identifying token purchases, and accounting for discounts and complimentary tokens
3. Segmented bookings into General (hourly sessions) and Private Events (corporate and group bookings). Built summary tables to calculate revenue, booking counts, and token adoption rates by segment. Compared token performance across booking types and sales channels (online vs. on-site)
5. Summarized findings into key insights and a recommendation

CHARTS & ANALYSIS

KEY INSIGHTS

- Tokens represented 1.71% of total venue revenue ($3,427.99 / $212,025.75), which indicates a low customer adoption and a limited financial impact on overall performance.
- Corporate events had 2x the token purchasing rate vs regular sessions (49.6% vs 24.5%).
- Approximately 1 in 3 online bookings includes a token purchase, which suggests a moderate ancillary demand.
- On-site token sales were minimal (48 groups), which suggests that the online pricing drives the revenue.
- Recommendation: Keep the token add-on, but do not expand it. Tokens only make up a small part of total revenue (1.71%), but they are still used by a meaningful number of customers, especially corporate groups (49.6% attachment rate). This shows the add-on works as a small upsell rather than a main product.

Most sales happen online and on-site sales are very low, that is why the focus should be on how it is shown during booking rather than trying to sell it in person. Instead of keeping all 8 machines, the business could reduce to 4 machines and use the space to introduce a new engaging or higher-impact attraction that could bring more value overall.

Additionally, private events show stronger performance than general bookings. It would be worth comparing this with data from one year ago to identify the trend. If the pattern holds, it may be beneficial to prioritize private event growth while keeping regular bookings as a secondary focus.
